

School Counselors: All In Every Day

We, the undersigned, raise our voices to celebrate school counselors during National School Counseling Week. The COVID-19 pandemic, racial violence and calls for a long overdue reckoning on systemic racism have taxed the social/emotional well-being of students, families and educators. School counselors play the distinct and indispensable role of attending to the well-being of all students and, although outside their official responsibilities, often their colleagues as well. School counselors collaborate with families, teachers, administrators and other specialized instructional support personnel to help bind a school together, and they have been tested this year like no other. In good times and in bad, school counselors offer constant and consistent support. We are so grateful for the work school counselors do every day to cultivate equitable and inclusive school communities and to help students envision and achieve their bright futures.
